The Hike from Hell by Sydney Riley

She organized her treatment paper very well. I like that she starts her story by the title, then goes to the logline, then to the characters, then to the Synopsis. The title is significantly related to the story, and it gives the reader a feel of the story. It shows that the story is going to be a terrifying story. Logline is very short, and it summarizes the story. I also like the descriptions of the characters. The description gives a good opening to the story and helps to understand each one of the characters and their role in the story. I also like that she wrote the characters' names in bold; it makes her paper look more organized. I like that the story has a beginning (going to hike) and an end (everyone returns safely); I also like the acts, for example, the rain, the bobcat, and the hives; they all encourage me to keep reading the story to the end. Each action makes me wonder what will happen and, as a result, encourage me to read to the end of the story. The overall story is excellent and what I love the most about it is that she wrote a question in the logline (what could go wrong) and answered it in the story (nothing went wrong, but there was a possibility it could go wrong, especially with the rain). Her story has a them a good tone and I would it would be a good pitch.

Dhruv Patel by Dhruv Patel

The paper looks organized. She starts with the title, the logline, the character, then the Scene. She describes the characters well and likes that they are students except for the intruder. I also like how she starts her story as a typical day, then suddenly everything turn around and the normal day is not normal anymore because of the threat of the intruder. The overall story looks good. I would recommend changing the logline to a sentence that summarizes the whole story instead of saying, "Just a regular day at Birmingham Sothern College" A regular day at BSC turns out to be terrifying. Also, I think the paper would look better if she replaced the "Scene" word with Synopsis because her story includes more than one sense. The story has a theme and I think it would be a good pitch.
